WORDS MAKE A SUCCESSFUL MAN

Words - The fire of deeds, actions and potential

"I have a dream. A dream where every single person of the country, including my children irrespective of born black or white breath freedom, equality, fraternity and happiness" spoke the man of the century, Martin Luther King, breathing fire and igniting unrest and thirst for revolution in thousands of hearts

Works speak the life of a successful man. One word's addresses and unmasks the social, economic, political, spiritual and psychological life one leads.

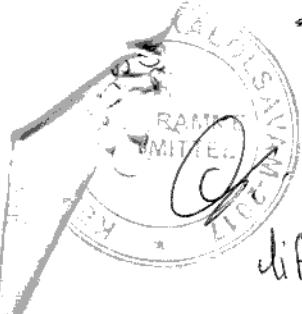

For a human being, his/her communication skills drives his action and injects fire into his arena of actions, deeds and realisations. There has been several historical and social instances demanding us through proven personalities to speak less and do more, nevertheless the strength of oratorial medium in breathing fire into heart's of people, representing the burning desire of a person, toppling dynasties and unravelling new etchings of history remains unsubstituted

There needs no other supreme evidence that reference to the Roman manipulator's words from Shakspear's play 'Julius caeser' in outlining the power and fire in well-structured words and their oratorical rendition. When Mark Antony saw his friend bruised in midst of the fiendish Brutus and followers, he spoke no more but awaited for an opportunity on a public platform to render his heart desired to speak out and breath fire into the hearts of people. His ironical rendition slowly overpowered each Roman's heart and moulded their thinkings, igniting their hearts against the much admired Brutus and his followers of Roman dynasty, thus changing the future ~~and~~ and destiny of Caesar's throne.

There are several hundred instances of words reigning with power, and equally important instances of one's deeds and actions overpowering the influence of words. Despite of the fact that words breath out what human heart reflects within itself, the practicality and fruitfulness of these words and sayings are equally importants.

In this modernised era, we have started a trend not to be blindfolded by a man's oratorical skills but believe in one's boldness, youthfulness of hearts in bringing words to be realised as deeds and actions. A very weak-sounded person, who rarely made internationally acclaimed speeches, and one who never wanted to enter politics live as the idol of personality in our hearts—"Mahatma Gandhi". His words, even though not resounding the walls of arenas, still live in the hearts of people and drive them forward. His words "I have a dream for India. An India where people are not disambiguated on the basis of their caste/creed, people are free from the clutches of immoral activities, black markets and women stand abreast to men". These words have been in the sacred book of Indian history breathing fire into our deeds, nevertheless of his death about 70 years before.

The real power of words lies in the impressions those leave in the sand of time. Despite being gone long back, Abraham Lincoln's words still guide the life of thousands of Americans.

Whatever be your sphere of action might be, the most important success point of your career and life in making you socially recognized and instilling trust of your followers in your heart. There is a misinterpretation that people who could breath fire into words should enter the political sphere. Great orators have found success in all spheres of life

Kiran Bedi, the first IPS officer of India was a woman of words and deeds. During her tenure, due to the unrest in North-Western region, she had a very hard time in instilling trust in the hearts of immigrants and emigrants and stabilizing the military, social and political unrest and bringing forth people's confidence. "If you believe in my words, you needn't stay, but if you believe in my potential of action, stay where your roots pull you to". These words were instrumental in putting out the fire of unrest that was swallowing Indian Integrity.

Another man who manipulated words and alphabets to change the destiny of Indian space life was none other than Homi Jahangir Bhabha. When Rohini-I failed in its first attempt and rebounded back, his colleagues including A.P.J Abdul Kalam was disheartened, where Homi Bhabha stood like a pillar of virtues and spoke "I am the man who takes the responsibility of assets made by Indian space history, then I myself would be taking responsibility of our failures and responsibilities. One of the most important characteristic of a social icon who is successful by means of his rendition skills is to take responsibility of his actions and deeds, despite his words didn't brought forth what it promised. This responsibility of leaving the shades of one's failure and maturity instills trust in the heart of followers.

There needs no descriptions how Medha Patkar from a common village girl came up as the sole trust pillar of Narmada Bachao Andolan guiding thousands of hearts. "They displace us. With Narmada being soiled, they not only displace our homes, but displace our lives, rights and space of breathing". She spoke these words, one fine day, when she had allegations facing to step back to make space for Government's demands of erecting Narmada dam.

Words have been the most instrumental species of truth, recognition and life when it comes to the trend where the government ship of democracy has swallowed across continents. It's the words and deeds and pains and mirth of thousands of people which had made the most popular form of government, democracy, accessible to more than 135 countries spanning various continents.

Malala Yousafzai, a girl of 13, of Swat valley once spoke "I believe in the air of democracy one person is breathing. Only when the ideals of terrorism is toppled, education becomes the realisation of each person. One book, one pen, one student, one teacher can change the world". When it comes to Aung San Suu Kyi, the woman of Myanmar democracy, who was house arrested during her ripe age spoke it breathed fire into her followers. Words of high potential, high action driven fire always makes a person and moreover his/her motives successful.

The most important reason why words had been deciding pillars of unravelling history is how it brings forth radicalism and liberalism and fights the conservationist ideas that is killing the society. There has been no instances from the history where a revolution has not been preceded by a strong oratorial spark. The French revolution had Rousseau, the Russian revolution had Lenin, American Independence had George Washington, American Independence had George Washington, breathing fires into the hearts of people. These words had created unrest in a society which had been suffering for long, had been under clutches of silence and seethed turmoil and driven societies to races of action and revolution.

There had been a great saying, that "even at times, Silence is a poem". Words are the spaces that communicate the essence of this burning Silence that etches the poem of unrest and breathes life into the thirst of revolution.

From all these instances where history brought forth the essence in people through their words, it has been instrumental in our educational system to bring forth most tactful methods of communication. Communication is the weapon of physically and politically weak person, the one who hunts for human rights. Whenever human rights have been split, they have been made structurally strong with words of demand.

Our schooling system has grown it's objective to earn jobs for it's students, rather than making them self-sufficient in recognizing their rights, the need to live and communicate smartly. The Indian education system fails to make a distinction between introverts and extroverts in communication skill and ~~but~~ instill in them the talent to manipulate words to bring success to their life. There has been less and less instances of rapport and psychological communication at schools and homes that has made our generations ^{forget} the right power of words and fire of success hidden in them. So it is very, very important, as success in life demands grip over words, to inculcate special teaching sessions of communication in schools. There has been Indian schools introducing sessions of 'Let's us talk and breathe' at school to fight the mundane school life and learning phase. It has been rightly said that a multilingual person, who handles several languages with equal ease seem to bring fire to words and manipulate or dominate over their power, bringing success to life. It's not only the history which tells about the power of words, but it has been statistically noted at schools that children who stabilize their way of speaking and methodology of interaction with society grow happy, intellectually strong, bold and gets guided into a thought provoking world. It is equally important for the children of next generation to have the realisation that words should be put into practice too, that adds to it fire or puts out it's fire, if not made fruitful.

"Words make an ideal man, an ideal man's heart is filled with thirst to speak"
— Rousseau
