

UNIQUENESS OF INDIAN CONSTITUTION

The very topic is one that arouses pride and prestige into the hearts of every Indian. The faultless and perfect make-up done to the Indian constitution by the former leaders of our state is applaudable and praise-worthy. As a constitution it imbibes all the core values of a nationalistic and prosperous state. It has adopted numerous golden values ^{from} of our neighbouring countries that are sovereign and secular in nature & similar to our country.

Coming into questioning the uniqueness of Indian constitution now, is Indian constitution unique and having its own essence? Is it one ^{which} puts forwards novel and standing-out ideas? The answer is nothing but a big yes. As a constitution of a country which was under the clutches of a foreignautocrat rule till the 19th century, our country's constitution was drafted not at the break of a single dawn or like in some of the recent controversial political melodramatic comedies in the course of a tranquil night. Our country's constitution that includes the poorest of the poor and the hotshots of the citizens equally and impartially and proclaiming every life the same before the law. It has its root and the churning up of an idea that went into the making going back to 1931, wherein our first and former President Jawaharlal Nehru's father, Motilal Nehru along with 8 other members saw the need of a distinct panel of members for the drafting of an apparent preamble, which gives the best and in every sense "imbibing the whole of the constitution" and a constitution for the country. It was during the first session of Indian National Congress - 1931 which took place in Karachi wherein the very first panel discussed and demonstrated and came to form an idea on what should go into the making of the most challenging task, a constitution for India, the most diverse and heritage country.

Nevertheless, to say the sessions followed with ideas that flooded the tables and into a formatted manner they turned. Scheduled castes, agricultural allowances, representative politics, secular and sovereign ideas flowed into every session. More and more intellects joined the venture later, paving way for the speckless putting forth of the constitution that hitherto astonishes the whole world.

India's constitution even though adapted ideas and political references from countries of South Africa, America and ~~in~~ on, it managed to uphold a very prodigious position along the constitutions of the world. What is the wow-factor really, if asked, the answer is India's citizens. Indians have a rich and indifferent history and heritage that lies shoulder-to-shoulder with the nationalism. Indians uphold in their hearts.

From the classic ~~life~~ lives of the south to the exemplary and far-from-the-ordinary lives in the North India is home to cultures and traditions that start from somewhere and see its end nowhere. India's languages accounts to almost 114 including all regional and remote languages also. India is said to have left the British powers that came to conquer the country open-jawed. It is nothing but the propensity and height of differences that lied between the people of this same nation alone.

Therefore it was nevertheless to say the need of the hour to inscribe a code of law that enhanced the peaceful co-existence and ^{promoted} harmonious living among the unequal, varied nation. Hindus, Sikhs, Christians, Muslims and religions that people knew never existed happens to be practised, propogated and followed in India.

They day of 1959, January 28, when the "Father of Indian Constitution", the legend ^{who} ~~that~~ refuses to die from our memories. Dr. B. R. Ambedkar pulled the curtains finishing off the code of law that would be permanent and unchangeable and at the same time one that allows into it amendments and editings of its own was exhibited before a nation who till date didn't have exposure to codified and clear cut provisions and restrictions whereas the only experience they had with law was impartial and undermining statements.

..... Secular, socialist, sovereign, republic, free, democratic, liberal republic. Moreover these are the fundamental adjectives of this state precisely. A state that might seem to follow religious intintions blindly sometimes refer to itself secular. This is something that brings in alot of misgivings. Being agnostic or monotheistic or polytheistic should never bring or send back priviledges into any citizen. That was precisely what was aimed at while proclaming itself a secular nation. Though in a political and social apparatus India can never be fully detached from superficial and religious powers, the makers ~~to~~ of this prestigious constitution.

preferred to call itself secular. This is simply because they realised what the real bet was. The prosperous functioning of the state, ~~the~~ was the real bet. The harmonious and amiable living despite all differences among the citizens was the real bet. Development and improvised living conditions were the real bet. Our traditions and cultures have a history planted deep into our lives and lives of all the ancestors we can think of. Superstitions were more like a part of our belief. This is what gave the masters of our constitution the revelation of redefining 'secularism' into the peaceful co-existence of all religions instead of detaching the state from religion.

Despite the fact that the fundamental watchword of our constitution 'democracy' is being murdered in several political instances today, India is one of the world's largest democratic powers in the world. Representative politics is one of the major bang-ons Indians get to enjoy. Voicing our concerns and being able to turn heads to the most underprivileged and marginalised sections of the country is inevitable in a country's proper functioning.

..... Other golden virtues that highlights the Indian constitution are; the liberal nature of the state which ensures all basic rights, right from elementary education to health facilities and the enabling of all kinds of economies to function hand in hand. It promotes the participation of the lowest of the low preferred and privileged sections of the nation in its functioning by allowing a considerable amount of quotas and areas for them. It puts forth the indispensable values of brotherhood and women empowerment too.

..... In short the constitution of India inculcates in itself the heart and soul of every Indian. It is designed to uplift and empower and to enable the citizens to break the bondages of precarious, senseless thinkings. It promises to advocate for equal rights despite any difference be it caste, creed, gender, race or language. It establishes a single idea - a unified integrated India, one India.

..... India has seldom bended knees for chauvinists. India has never tolerated extremism nor will it ever let the biased baseless claims of a particular class define what nationalism really is. It's been a long history of living under men who thought bigger than us, realising what liberty is, refusing to settle for less, toiling and turning heads from what we do not deserve and finally getting served with things we deserve. Meanwhile today when we remember ourselves and are fortunate to celebrate 70 years of scripting down our souls we are bound to remind the world and ourselves that we promised to keep oaths on this code of law and not unless our throats are cut we sway from this. This constitution lighted the dark lives we lived - like in dungeons, so we ~~are~~ should be keen to stick with it whatever happens. "India is my motherland." our words that fail to lose life, ~~we should make sure that they are uttered with the~~ making sure that its uttered with the ~~res~~ dignity it requires is our duty. ~~For~~ #
