The Vision For A New India

India, was not a country who had their own freedom. It was actually fulfilled by the hardwork of many freedom fighters. The current state (condition) of India happened only because of the greatest contributions which were contributed by some of the prominent freedom fighters. One such example is Mahatma Gandhi.

When Mahatma Gandhi (Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi) returned to India, the country was under the leadership of colonial rule (British government). He wanted some reforms to be made, which would later become revolution against the British government. One of the few steps which Gandhiji took was to non-cooperate with the colonial rule. Many other freedom fighters joined hands-together on this method of revolution. Mahatma Gandhi's method of revolution made many of the freedom fighters an astonishment as there was no violence in his method of protest. This method later became known as 'satyagraha'. Even though Gandhi had become successful in opposing the colonial government, he knew that he had to change some aspects of Indian people's life such as caste discrimination, race discrimination etc. This was one of the ^{most} important as well as toughest objective for Mahatma Gandhi.

Mahatma Gandhi had a vision for India after independence. Some of his agendas were:

(a) the country in which all people are treated equally

(b) the country where people have their voice for their rights.

(c) the country where liquor and other harmful drugs are prohibited etc.

Gandhiji mainly fought over the social evils in the society even after independence. He wanted to abolish untouchability from India. Due to these reasons, he was very particular in preparing a constitution for India after its independence due to India being a democratic country.

Even though most of Gandhiji's vision for India became true, there are some problems which exist in modern society too. Some of the problems are:

(a) Usage of harmful drugs and liquor.

(b) Racial discrimination in rural parts of India etc.

It is evident from these examples that the vision according to Mahatma Gandhi is not completely fulfilled. Even though his visions were not completely fulfilled, many people started to think ^{a lot}. This led a boon for ideas and new plans. Due to the discovery of these new ideas, many changes started to take place during the 2000s. Indian Constitution witnessed a major number of changes.

Unfortunately, these changes, even though was for greater good, was being misused by some people. As every country each country (including India) progress each year, it is a very important step to develop the country as it is progressing throughout the year.

If people approach the government with their opinion, then the government must look into those suggestions and make their decisions accordingly.

For me, India is my mother country and I would like to see that my country - India ~~must~~ ^{to} be prosperous. My vision for a newer India is widened among many sectors, some of them are:

(i) Financial sector: India, as an economic country, lacked in self-economy and at times relied on foreign economy. Just after the independence, India imposed many taxes on foreign products which led to decrease in foreign exchange. But after few years, the imposed taxes were removed and foreign exchange started to increase. Our country, India is a primary exporter of raw materials

As an Indian, I clearly understand that the future India must prosper more in exports. Export must not only be concluded with raw materials, but also by expanding the export of finished goods. One of my vision in finance sector is to increase the income (foreign exchange value) in India.

(ii) Industrial Sector: If we take a survey of businesses all around the world, we could find that, many of the Indians are the owners of businesses or industries outside of India. India infact has less number of startups while comparing with other countries. This happened mainly due to some reasons, they are:

- * For starting a startup, many procedures must be completed inorder to atleast run the startup. Even though the government allots various resources, it becomes insufficient soon after.

* Corruption of government employees, lead to delays in receiving the granted permissions.

* Unions, who protest against the startup unnecessarily etc.

Hence, my second vision for newer India is in the industrial sector where these restrictions can be avoided to ensure the startups and other businesses to flourish in India.

(iii) Environmental sector: A few years back, India was known for being the clean country due to being free from pollution of various kinds, such as, air pollution, water pollution, land pollution etc. Unfortunately this remained only for some period. Due to us human beings, these following situations occurred before us, they are:

* Increase in usage of vehicles led to air pollution.

* Deforestation of trees which led to land pollution

* Inefficient sewage treatment and inefficient waste disposal led to water pollution. The government actually introduced various initiatives for fighting against these pollution, but most of the time, it became in vain. Due to these reasons, I strongly have a vision due to which the environmental sector would be advanced as well as would flourish. Some of the steps are:

(i) Provision of alternative fuels which are eco-friendly at lower rates than the present fuel.

(ii) Afforestation of trees and regular follow up on the trees to ensure that they grow healthy healthy.

(iii) Accurate planning for sewage management.

(iv) Alternative modes of transportation which is more eco-friendly.

(iv) Natural Calamities: India always becomes a victim of natural calamities. Half of the calamities are due to lack of management and other half is due to nature itself which can't be avoided. In my opinion, the calamities occurred due to lack of proper management must be resolved. An example for this problem is the flood incident in Kerala which could have been resolved if proper management and use of technology on the management be done. Natural calamities such as earthquake, cannot be avoided, but with enough precautions, the number of casualties would be lesser. Use of modern technology is the main step towards the precaution.

Other problems include unemployment, poverty etc. which have been drastically reduced by the governments, but yet to be resolved completely.

I found out that for the future era, one of the most important initiative is the cooperation between the government and the people. If we observe, we could come into a conclusion that there are limitless amount of vision in each one. If each one of them share their vision, then they could develop our country India.

I believe that the youth has more number of fresh vision for a new dawn of India. If those visions are incorporated into our ~~A~~ country India, then by far our country would be the most developed country by 2050 (approx). As time passes by, each youth must present their visions in order for a great country - 'INDIA'.
