War happens when language fails.

"The selfish intent of wanting to preserve peace initiates wars."

Introduction:

Wars are man-made disaster often stemming from either selfish desires or simple misunderstandings. Due to the complicated nature of humans we find new ways to quarrel against each other and destroy one another mainly in the search for wealth, power and fame. In most cases wars break out in order to showcase military power and to depict their weaponry in hopes of upholding peace through intimidation. Wars are but pure destruction. Nobody in truth wins in a war. Its a playground for bloodshed and agony.

Communication Barrier

There are a lot of reasons as to why wars break out. One of the most prominent cause is the failure of communication. Communication is of prime importance when dealing with sensitive information. We humans are but social creatures, hence the reason why we are to coordinate our ideas and plan out ~~out~~ our thoughts in a meaningful manner. When communication fails we often get weary. The significance of communication is a non-negotiable factor for economic growth and prosperity. When this essential communication is hindered, problems arise causing needless strife. This is the major reason why politicians and world leaders often speak less and practice their vocabulary and communication.

Noone wants to be misunderstood.

Yes. In a world where everyone can freely express their thoughts and emotions people are bound to be misunderstood. And this is something which cannot be avoided since humans are not perfect creatures and humans are caught up in their own fantasies and illusions.

Everyone lives bound by their own knowledge and awareness. All that is what we call reality. In truth both knowledge and awareness are equivocal. One man's reality might be another's illusion. We all live inside our own fantasies.

This quote emphasises how all of us are trapped in our own selfish desires. This is a major reason why we all are misunderstood and a reason why everyone wants to understood

And this desire to be understood is not necessarily a bad thing because all humans want recognition whether that be from their loved ones, colleagues or ~~po~~ friends. The one way through which we can ~~man~~ minimize this misunderstanding is by opening up what we can deliver. When others can realise our potential the chances for misunderstanding becomes minimal. Words, Ideas and thoughts alike can be hard to put forward in order to reap benefits for ourselves when others mistake it. The one thing all should fathom is that mistakes and misunderstandang is integral in life for no one can really make out our thinking? like others.

Flawed Nature of Speech

There is an innate flaw in humans where we can't really map out what we think into words. When this happens humans are faced with a moral dilemma as if they are in a cat and mouse game with their own mind. Humans find it hard to express their thoughts purely in a social interaction. This might be either from social anxiety or other pressures that one faces in life. These flaws are a major reason as to why communication fails. And when the basic exchange of thoughts is hindered, everyone is in trouble due to actions taken without proper thought.

Wars as a result of misunderstanding.

Wars can make way from very simple matters because humans are always in search of something and this constant search leads them into mistaking things and taking sudden actions on things which are not really of any importance. Throughout the history we have witnessed an unrelenting amount of wars. Wars have existed since ancient times and will continue to exist till humans exist. People often misunderstand the ideas and thoughts of others which can lead to simple quarrels and these feeble quarrels can light up wars after as time passes.

Examples of Misunderstanding

Throughout the long history of this world that we live in we have seen an array of misunderstandings that lead to catastrophic disasters and the death of countless innocent lives. Almost half of the wars that occur in this world is stemmed from simple misunderstanding of speech. When one feels that the other is ~~is~~ challenging them or threatening them they instinctively becomes aggressive or defensive. Most times these types of aggression leads to huge wars. There have been many incidents in this world where nuclear warfares could have broken out due to misunderstandings of people. These warfares if broken out could have obliterated half the world and more.

The Inevitable Nature of Wars.

Wars are but inevitable for this world itself is flooded with selfish desires and greed for everything. Everywhere you look in this world where there is light shall always be shadows to be found as well. And where a concept of victors exist the vanquished shall also strive. The innate intent of wanting to preserve peace lights the way for war and hatred is born in order to protect love. This is the root cause as to why wars have been since time immemorial and why they will continue to exist as long as life remains. Wars raging across groups of people and wars waged between countries are no exception for both comes to life through miscommunication. Hence the reason why wars are an intangible concept which can't be erased no matter the efforts of mankind.

Proper Communication: A Medication to prevent wars.

Proper communication is actually a medicine that works wonders to prevent many wars. Because of the nature of wars we can easily obstruct these calamities if we solve it through proper communication. If world leaders and other officials make up their mind to discuss in depth about the happenings of the world with no real place of misunderstanding. We can easily minimize the chances for a war before it seeps into the selfish nature of man.

Proper communication between people can mitigate even complex dilemmas and troubles. By articulating thoughts independently without the constraints of another we can express the depths of our mind with no hesitation. This type of communication can indeed yield a better future for all of us.

Misuse of Words : A Harbinger of Wars.

In actuality the misuse of words is something which can alleviate the chances of a war or any sort of misunderstandings happenings. Because when words are misused they lose credibility and that makes their expressions seem pointless. This misuse of languages leads to the failure in articulating thoughts and expressing notions that one may have on a particular topic. This causes a hindrance in understanding and makes it hard for people to comprehend what the other person is trying to convey. That's why the misuse of words can act as a medium that causes the uprisal of wars.

Expression of Ideas: A Paradox of Language

"When ideas are expressed in a very simple manner, it becomes difficult to comprehend

When ideas are conveyed in a difficult manner, it becomes difficult to read"

There ~~is~~ exists a very intriguing paradox when it comes to language. For language is in fact very difficult to comprehend even if it is written in a simple manner. A common example which we can point out is poetry. Most poems are written in simple language but are a hassle to comprehend. Poets too are trying their ~~har~~ best to communicate with readers but due to the ambiguous nature of language it becomes a challenge even when the words are simple.

Two Roads : A Moral Divergence.

Two roads diverged in a wood, And I -
I took the one less travelled by,
And that has made all the difference.

- Robert Frost

These lines borrowed by the beautiful poem 'Road Not Taken' by Robert Frost eloquently describes the nature of choices and decisions in the human life. He encourages us to change indefinitely. I too think that change is needed when we come to realise that wars can be dissolved through proper communication and exchange of ideas we can forge a new society where people are not driven by selfish desires not in search of for understanding.

Dependency of Man: The Toxic Truth

Dependency is an important concept which we all abide by. From the moment we are born into this world we all are but dependent on one thing or another. All of us seek ^{someone} ~~something~~ superior ^{who} ~~which~~ we ~~feel~~ feel is better than ourselves. Whether that be in terms of academic ability, physical prowess or mental fortitude. We are in a constant search for superior ones. Students depend on teachers and parents, workers depend on their superiors and those superiors do the same. That is how kings are made and how gods are born. This dependent nature of man is what makes the foundation for wars since people depend on one another. This breeds the concept of power. And the relentless quest for power is what builds the idea of violence and wars.

The Final Stroke: Conclusion.

"The hard truth is that we all are dumb. No one can actually express their emotions without any sort of filtering. Hence the reason why everyone is misunderstood and everyone will be misunderstood. This failure will continue to create wars and other disasters"

Misinterpretation of thoughts and ideas are in fact a breathstake of living. It isn't something we can overcome in a simple manner. It requires patience, as well as determination of wanting to uphold peace. When we can understand our own limitations and build on them to express ideas more clearly we can put an end to what we now term as wars. In conclusion wars are but a simple misunderstanding born out of the inability of speech.
