Journey of Life through Earth

A place of tranquility and unparalleled peace, made from furious fires and God's own grace.

It is filled with thunderstorms and tender breeze brimming with endless pride, not feigning care.

This place in all its glory is a battleground.

An ocean with no guiding light.

Where the ones who are lost are never found,

and are forgotten with the ruthless cycle of time, a site.

But here in this burning planet full of fright

also exists flattering smiles full of gay, and stories of souls with endless might

and children with their teasing grins joyful at the thought of a new day.

Among the wallowing waters lie fishes enjoying their time -
Taking in the light of the sun, stands the tall trees and poets who smile at the simplest rhymes.
To live, they don't worry about paying any fee.

This maze with so many highs and lows holding on to it's blues and greys is still home of many with hopes and cause.
The weight of lives easing ceasing with no dismay.

Here the pain and hurt won't go away
but it heals over time, not fast but slow.

Here the sunray's warmth and ^{shine of the sunray} sunrays won't ever last but it would always come back to glow

This place in all it's greatness and untold pain is where journeys begin and end

Where all lively creatures with something to gain work to give their lives even the faintest meaning before it's end.

Like an old railway station
With trains ^{that} arrive to drop people off and to take some to their desired destination.
This place is a stepping stone ^{from which} that all men has to jump off.

This stable stay full of love and hate
Is none than the planet we call Earth
The second mother of all, giving and giving for all to be safe.
Our home that ^{we} stay in till death from birth.

It is an elixir, a panacea of sort kindness and fury all in one Where the soulless get buried to rot
while new lives begin in warmth of the sun
